RUTTMAN WINS INDIANAPOLIS CLASSIC

Troy Ruttman, 22-year-old speed demon from Linwood, Calif., won the 500-mile Memorial Day race at Indianapolis Speedway in the fastest auto race in history. Ruttman earned his race victory at the expense of Vukovitch who had paced the race from the early stages.

Vukovitch, leading with just eight laps to go, crashed his high-speed racer into the northwest retaining wall while going better than 130 mph. He was not hurt. He walked away from the wreck. Ruttman was just 26 seconds behind when Vukovitch crashed.

The fastest race was over in four hours. Ruttman's average speed for the entire course was 128.222, nearly two and a half miles per hour faster than last year's mark. 20 of the original field of 33 cars were still in the race at the end. Behind Ruttman was Rathman in second place and Sam Hanks in third.
